Milwaukee, Wis, (UP)—Beauty contests and co-education were condemned by Archbishop Samuel A. Stritch in an address at the opening of Mount Mary College, Catholic girl's school, here.

"If co-education exists preforce, it should always be remembered that it is not the ideal, but a practical necessity," the archbishop said.

NIGHT SCHOOL SHOULD BE OPEN

The Federal Government Realizes This and Offers Generous Aid

The federal government has come to the rescue of communities who failed to open night schools this fall on account of lack of funds by offering to pay the salaries of teachers on condition that they are taken from the ranks of those on the waiting lists or selected from others than teachers who have ability to fill such positions. This is a generous offer and shows that Uncle Sam realizes the importance of an education and is willing to make sacrifices to give young people the Benefit of what they can get in the evening schools. Quite a few places have dispensed with the night schools or reduced the number of teachers so that many anxious to take advantage of them could not be accommodated.

Condemning "exhibitionism," Archbishop Stritch added that "we want no bathing beauties in our Catholic schools."

"Some colleges," he said, "lay more stress on the prettiest girls on the campus than on mental attainments. It is this which has so debased university life." High school promenades and selection of a prom queen also were criticized by the clergyman.

"Those pictures of prom queens, dressed up like debutantes in a Hollywood movie, are silly and have no place in high schools," he

ALPINIST POET GOT HIS WISH

Yosemite, Cal — (UP) — Intrepid Walter A. Starr, Jr, Alpinist and poet, was buried high on the Clyde Minaret of the High Sierras, in the solitude he wished for in the verse he left behind him.

Starr, a former Stanford University track athlete, left his San Francisco law office to conquer another peak of the glacieriaden Minarets.

He had climbed Mt Blanc in the Swiss Alps, the Palisades in New Jersey, Mt Whitney in his own rugged California mountains.

The Alpinist sought how to ascend treacherous Michael Minaret. After friends had no word from him for two weeks, they organized searching parties.

him for two weeks, they organized searching parties.

Norman Clyde, his friend and fellow mountain climber, recovered the body, deep in a mountain crevasse, after two weeks' search. Near the body, 400 feet from the summit, was a verse Starr had written during his short stay in the mountain territory.

"God's wilderness is calling me To sining summits, bright and cool," he wrote.

And further down in the poem clyde read:

Clyde read: Lure of the Sierra, wild and Lure of the Sierra, wild and free, Jewels deep set in the shining skies.

Defiant mountains beckon me
To glory and dream in their Paradise."

Starr's family decided to let him lie where he had fallen, where he had found his "Paradise." Clyde and another mountaineer built a rock cairn over the body, and there it rests.
